Course Description

Leadership is not limited just to singular measure of effectiveness – it is a multidimensional phenomenon. Values-based leadership is different from other modes in that it includes all the three factors: Effectiveness, Morality and Time. Values-based leadership is not simply about a style, how-to, following some recipe, or even mastering the vision thing. Instead, it is about ideas and values.

This is an advanced course in management that is designed to stimulate creative and critical thinking about how leaders create value in and for contemporary organizations. The course materials have been selected to prompt thinking about the complexity of leading organizations from a wide variety of perspectives. As a result, participants in the course will improve their understanding of organizations, as well as their ability to relate to, function within, and effectively lead organizations to create value.
